LITIGATION

GAIL TITLE

Katten Muchin Rosenman LLP,
Los Angeles

Title has her hands full as managing partner of her firm's L.A. office. But she's also one of the busiest entertainment litigators for cases you'll probably never hear about. She often handles confidential arbitrations, including a current one involving a

"major TV producer and studio over licensing fees." Her on-the-record cases include representing Ben Silverman's Reveille in a pair of idea theft cases involving "The Biggest Loser," as well as a class action against the studios dealing with closed captioning and misleading advertising for DVDs (it resulted in a "constructive" resolution). When asked for influences, Title says former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright recently inspired her while speaking at a legal awards dinner.

LITIGATION

A good litigator can handle any case, but few understand the entertainment business enough to regularly tackle the industry's thorniest courtroom disputes. From defamation to copyright infringement, and from stolen screenplays to backend profits, these specialists know the case law as well as the players.
